FOLSOM POWERHOUSE TOUR

will start with lunch at noon on Saturday March 25. We'll meet at a restaurant (to be announced) in Old Folsom. Then at 2 we'll amble down to the PowerHouse for the tour, hosted by our own Norm Benedict. (Norm says the tour is free but parking at the Powerhouse is $10, so if you want to save that, leave your car parked close by and walk a block or 2)

Folsom is the site of one of the first every A/C Hydroelectric stations in the country, the tour is a fascinating look into the history of our area and of technology of the late 19th century.

Thanks to Norm for arranging this for us.

CCM CAR NEWS: WE'RE ON FOR OCTOBER 7

We have nearly secured Hagan Park again for our annual show. We've set the date for October 7, and we hope to move CCM Day in the Park back to Rancho. Car Show Director Richard Teerlink is staying in close touch with the Park District and is ready to pounce as soon as they give us the ok.

Stay tuned for more, and plan on a bigger and better show this year.

11 CHECKS TO MAKE BEFORE YOUR FIRST SPRINGTIME DRIVE

It's time to unlock the garage and drive! But you need to check a few things first.

If the car's been sitting for years instead of months, you get into a whole other level of issues like bad gas, clogged fuel lines, corroded cooling system, and failed hydraulic seals. But for a season's sit, the list below should be pretty good.

If, when you open up and find a flat, you must deal with that first.

Then, check the pressure of all five tires. While you're doing that, inspect the sidewalls for cracking. Odds are that if the car is stored indoors, the tires aren't going to get much worse over a single winter, but it's easy for 10 years to go by one winter at a time and the tires to cross from old-but-OK to sheesh-I-don't-want-to-drive-farther-than-to-the-gas-station-on-those.

If the battery has been on a tender or trickle-charger for the winter, it's probably fine. If you didn't do either of these things, you'll may have a problem. You can check with a multimeter. If it reads 12.6 volts, or near it, the battery is fully charged, and if it's in good health and the cable connections are good, it should turn the engine over. But with every 0.2-volt drop, the battery loses about 25 percent of its cranking power, so if it's reading closer to 12 volts than 12.6, it's unlikely to crank. So measure it, and if you need to charge it, charge it.

Check the oil, coolant, and brake fluid levels. If the oil looks black, make a note to change it. Give a quick look in the radiator and expansion tank to check the level and see if there's any oil in there, indicating a weakening head gasket.

Next, look under the car for evidence of leaks. Hopefully all you find is a few dots of oil and nothing more. Anything green is antifreeze, and its source should be identified before you drive the car, as a minor leak can quickly mushroom into a gusher. Blue liquid can be either antifreeze or washer fluid. Clear liquids are usually power steering or brake fluid. We all know what tranny fluid or gear oil looks like.

Move to the back of the car where the fuel tank is, skooch under, look, and sniff. Fuel tanks can leak from age, particularly with Ethanol's propensity for attracting water. Since it's good practice to store a car with a full tank of gas (this eliminates the chance for humid air to get into the tank and contaminate the gas with water), if you find the tank leaking, it ruins your day, since you now need to drain it. Gas can also leak from rotted or cracked rubber fuel lines. Gasoline isn't like oil or antifreeze; there should be zero-tolerance for any amount of fuel leakage. You should also sniff in the engine compartment to be certain gas isn't leaking there.

In case your garage has an affinity for rodents and they've made your car home, pop the top off the air cleaner and have a quick look, and look around for chewed wires.

Give the hoses and belts a quick inspection. Squeeze the hoses. If any of them are soft, order replacements. Inspect the belts for cracks and cuts and put a thumb on each of them to check the tension. If they're obviously loose, take a moment and tighten them.

If the car has passed the above checks, the engine is ready to be cranked. If it doesn't crank, clean the battery and cable terminals and try again. If the voltage is a little low, you can jump-start the car, but if the battery is deeply drained (turn the key and you get a click of the starter but that's all), or worse, flatlined, it's best to replace it before you drive the car. Alternators aren't designed to charge deeply discharged batteries. Although old analog cars often don't seem to mind, post-OBDII cars with a proliferation of electronic control modules can do very odd things, including bucking and dying, if a deeply discharged battery is jump-started and the car is driven.

If the car is fuel injected, it will likely start in just a few seconds. If it doesn't, the fuel pump may not be running, either due to a popped fuse, stuck relay, or the pump itself. Carbureted cars often take much longer to start due to the lower fuel pump pressure, the need to refill the float bowls, the far less precise air/fuel metering, and the lack of direct spray into the cylinders. A short blast of starting fluid into the carburetor throat can coax the engine to life. If a carbureted car still won't start after sitting, the problem is often that an old fuel line has become dry-rotted and is sucking air rather than fuel.

Once the engine is running, let it warm up a bit. Then shut it off and look again for leaks.

It's common for brake pads to stick to rotors from sitting. If the car has been stored indoors, the rotors probably won't have rusted much, but still you want to scope it out. Take the car for an easy lap around the block. Brake gently to verify that the brake pedal is firm and functional, then more firmly. Pick up speed and do it again. Note any brake pedal shudder (pulsation), pulling to one side, and steering wheel shimmy. Pull back into the driveway and check again for any fluid leakage.

Take the car up onto the highway or other road where you can build speed. Verify that it comes up to operating temperature and stays there. Continue to test the brakes for shuddering or pulling. If there's steering wheel shimmy that wasn't there in the fall, it's likely the tires are flat-spotted from sitting. It may go away. It may not. Come home, recheck for fluid leakage, and check again the next morning.

If the car passes these tests, you can conclude it's in about the same condition it was in when put away in the fall. But keep in mind that it doesn't mean that the car has been healed of any known problems. Plan on a series of drives in increasing distances, give the car a chance to prove itself and for you to regain confidence. Fix whatever crops up. And then enjoy!
